Observing that the original logos are traditional and contain detailed elements and colours that can be used as inspiration we decided to take some of this and move it forward.

The star was a required element within the new logo.

Taking the original Wiltshire Wyvern and Dorsets Salamander elements from each of the original logos and simplifying them would be the best way to show some continuity and heritage taken from each of the original brands.

We experimented with different arrangements of the Salamander and Wyvern, we found that facing inwards it looked like they were fighting. Facing the same direction gave the impression of a chase and that the best way was to have them face outwards, both determined and looking to the future.

We have experimented with many versions of the logo using the Salamander and Wyvern.

We tried an alternative version where they were redrawn more angular and in outline.

We also looked at slightly different typographic treatment, which led to a simpler design.

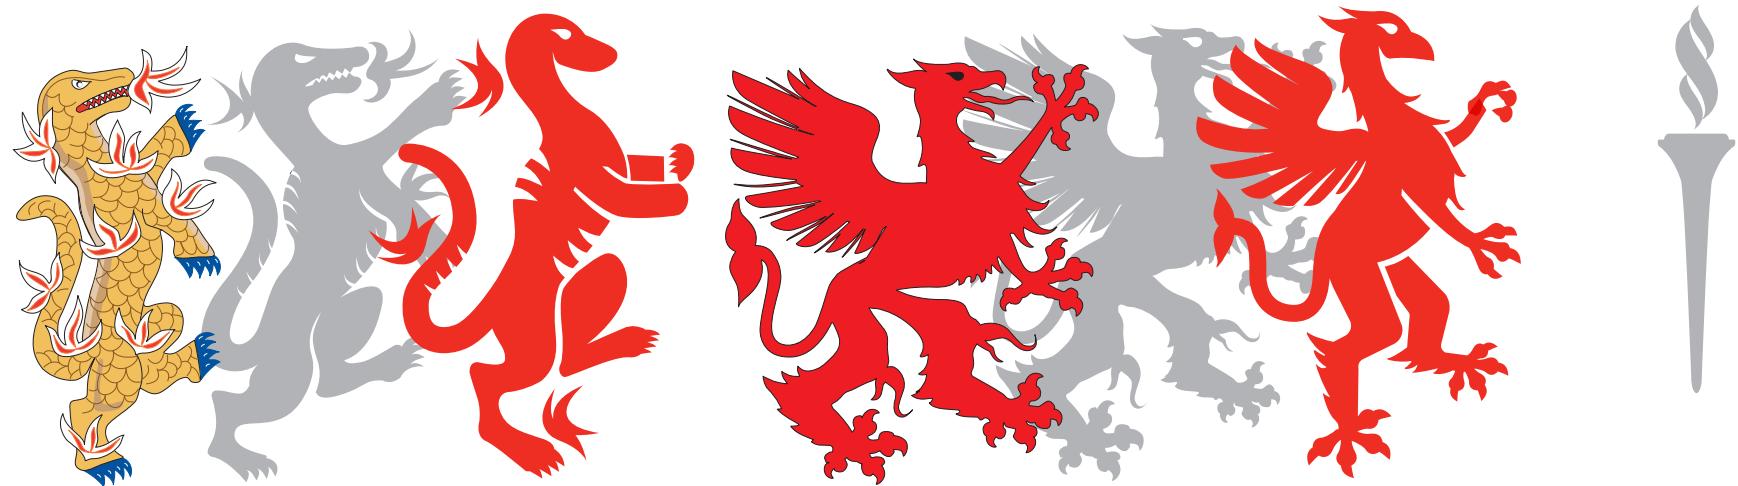

In the end it was concluded that we needed to bring them together somehow, show unity and not have them back to back.

Creating unity

So that the Wyvern and Salamander could now face each other and not look like they are in conflict, we decided to illustrate them holding something.

To do this, we needed to redesign the original illustrations, give them an equal mass and more upright posture.

We also needed to create an item for them to hold. We decided that the most neutral and positive item they could hold together would be a torch.

To try something new and completely different we designed a logo using a family being held and protected by Dorset and Wiltshire Fire and Rescue.
